FOREWORD

To one of the few left of a generation which will soon have followed in the footsteps of the generations gone before, the gathering together of the facts in this volume has given much of pleasure and some sadness.

The friendships made by letter in some cases have been inspiring, and I am sure will be lasting. Personal contacts with some of the descendants of those whom I knew many years ago, likewise have increased my family loyalty and admiration for their ancestors including the subjects primarily of this record, my grandparents.

It has been possible to read much of the history of the lives of those whose names appear in these pages, from the bare facts, to realize something of their struggles, heartaches and successes, to see how in some cases the disappointments and trials of life have finally brought success and happiness. Likewise, there has been pleasure and the awakening of new hopes because of the good cheer and youthful ambitions of the younger folks of the family, preparing themselves for the future in their school work and pressing forward with the same energy that we older ones knew in our earlier days.

It has been the aim to furnish as near a complete record as possible of all the descendants of John and Keturah Quine Whitlock, and to give those now living, and through this record to those yet to come, a glimpse of their high character and the indomitable purpose which led them into the wilderness more than a hundred years ago, to found a home and bring up a family of real character and worth to the new community. This history is designed to serve as a basis for a continuing family record from the birth of James Whitlock, John's father, in 1762 and that of Mary Adams Golden Whitlock, the wife of James, in 1758, to the end of the year 1937, it being impossible to keep the record perfect up to this or any other particular date.

The sixth generation from John and Keturah Whitlock, now entering upon life's stage one by one, will reach beyond the year 2,000 as they approach my age. My grandfather and myself have already spanned more than one hundred and forty years.

PLAN OF THE RECORD.

The families of John Whitlock's children have been designated by CAPITAL LETTERS from A to J in the order of the children's births, beginning with the oldest child Mary Whitlock Baldwin. Each page of the same branch is designated by the identifying letter at the outer border.

Numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 across the top of each page indicate the number of the generation AFTER Mary, Allen, etc. Their children begin under the figure 1, grandchildren under figure 2 and so on. Persons whose names begin under

CHAPTER I

The first of the great principles of the American Revolution was the right of the people to alter or to abolish the form of their government. This principle was the foundation of the American Republic, and it was the first principle of the American Constitution. The second principle was the right of the people to elect their representatives to the legislative branch of the government. 1--except those in the same branch of the family--are first cousins, those under 2 are second cousins, etc. through the five generations after the children of John and Keturah.

IN THE SAME BRANCH, those under 1 are brothers and sisters, under 2 first cousins if they are not brothers and sisters, etc.

If your name begins under figure 2 you are a second cousin to those in other branches whose names begin under that number, with exceptions named above, second cousin "once removed" as the law books say, to those whose names begin under figure 1, third cousins "once removed" of those whose names begin under figure 3, etc. Those whose names begin under figure 5 are fifth cousins with exceptions indicated as to other numbers.

Underscored initial letters indicate direct descendants of John and Keturah.

Every possible effort has been made to get the correct dates of births and deaths and marriages; and when there has been a conflict of dates from different sources, the one that appeared to be most reliable has been chosen, the family Bible being taken as most authoritative when it could be located. Many dates were obtained from gravestones and some from public records.

The latest known residence (1937) is given following the name generally, in the hope that you may renew the acquaintances of those whom you may have "lost awhile" from the circle of your friends. It is hoped, too, that you will meet personally or by correspondence, some of your near relatives that you have ~~never~~ never known and that as you make your vacation tours or otherwise you will go a little out of your way if necessary, to meet some of them in person, so that the wholesome spirit of family love and affection that existed fifty to seventy-five years ago when all lived within a few miles of the old homestead, may be revived.

It is also hoped that with the revival of family spirit the burial ground in which lie the remains of John and Keturah and other members of the family, which was donated by grandfather John shortly after their settlement on the old homestead north of the Little Vermillion River, may be redeemed from the burs and weeds and brush which now fill it year after year, and become a shrine decently fenced and kept, with the graves of our common ancestors properly and permanently protected and gravestones permanently set.

I feel a personal pride in the task now being completed and want to express my appreciation of the assistance given in the prompt replies to my inquiries. Among those who have given splendid aid are Mary Eliza Fauley, Hardy H. Whitlock, Nettie Campbell Lucas, Mary Baldwin Whitlock, Ursula Mendenhall Campbell, Olive Mendenhall Reed and many others. I wish especially to mention Mary Baldwin Rutherford who passed away on February 7, 1938 as the result of a fall, at the advanced age of eighty-five years, who wrote me several letters in four or five months preceding her death, in one of which she enclosed Five Dollars for a copy of the record.

ORIGIN OF THE NAME

The name WHITLOCK at least seems to have had enough prominence among English people to cause considerable discussion in more recent times as to its origin. Whether it originally signified in English or Anglo Saxon, one with white "lockes" to use the old spelling, seems as yet very much unsettled.

One genealogist says the name is "distinctively English and has a derivation from the Scandinavian deity L'ock whose title enters into many family names such as Lockhart, Whitlock, Blacklock, etc."

Another says the name "is said by some authorities to have been derived from the Dutch personal name itlock, meaning 'a courageous swordsman.' " Others suggest that the first to be designated by this name resided at a white lake, others that it had reference to the color of the hair. In the formative days of the English language, the spelling of names like that of other words, was as various as the ideas of the spellers as to how to express the sound desired. So this name is found in many forms such as Witlok, Witlac, Witloc, Whitloc, Whitlok, Whitlac, Wytelock, Whytelock, Whytelak, Whitlooks, Whitelock and Whitlock as well as others too numerous to mention. Whitlock is the form most commonly used in America today.

Apparently the Whitlocks, in whatever way they or their contemporaries spelled their name, were not nonentities in their various times and places. They had enough self-assertion so that their neighbors knew they were present. While there seems little of history to speak of their prominence in world affairs of affairs of state, and few if any, might have been described as "captains of industry" in their respective fields, generally they seem to have been men of distinct personality who stood for principles, law abiding, and in general interested in the higher things of life without seeking for prominence among their fellows. In general they seem not to have had much of the modern idea of "selling one's self," but preferred to do what they thought best and let the rest of the world think what it wished.

The family was known quite early in English history, William Whitlock of Oxfordshire about the year 1273 A. D. being among the early members whose names are mentioned.

Bulstrode Whitlock was a prominent English lawyer and statesman of Cromwell's time, a member of Parliament, one of the Oxford commissioners to treat with Charles I, opponent of Presbyterianism in the Westminster Assembly of 1643, Ambassador to Sweden, Commissioner of the Great Seal to Richard Cromwell and one time Speaker of the House of Commons. So the name at least was not forbidden among the upper crust.

There were among the early settlers in America, from New England to Virginia, numerous Whitlocks; and some believe that Thomas Whitlock who was living in Isle of Wight County, Virginia in 1638, was the first of the family in this country, though the writer has met with many statements from different sources that there were three brothers or four brothers or five brothers who came to America at the same time. ~~which~~ Which number, if either, is correct, we have not yet learned.

There were numerous Whitlocks among the officers of the Continental Army during the Revolutionary War, from Connecticut, New York, New Jersey and Virginia particularly. Whether great grandfather James was the "James Whitlock" from Virginia who was a Revolutionary soldier has not yet been determined for us.

A genealogist says the Whitlocks "have been noted for their energy, industry, integrity, piety, perseverance, fortitude, patience, resourcefulness, initiative, courage and leadership."

JOHN Whitlock	" December 13, 1798	Died July 26, 1887

Above is taken from the family Bible of John and Keturah Whitlock, under the heading:
"Record of Old Original Families."

Mary Adams first married Jacob Golden, who died between September 17 and October 28, 1779, he having made his will on September 17th. It was proved in Court in Henry County, Virginia, October 28th, and provided for his widow, a son William, a daughter unnamed and an unborn child, Jacob. The birth of Hannah Whitlock, first child of James and Mary, July 20, 1784, shows that Mary did not long remain a widow.

The John Whitlock Bible shows the following dates of births of the Golden children:

Anna, February 29, 1776; William November 14, 1777;
Jacob April 13, 1780, seven months after his father's will was written.

After the death of James Whitlock in 1804, Mary married Peter Harris as shown by the marriage records of Grainger County, Tennessee, the marriage bond being dated May 19, 1808. Original bond was found by the compiler of this record. A copy of a letter which appears in this volume, written by William Golden in 1826, to his mother Mary Harris ("marry harris" as he wrote it) confirms this third marriage. The James Whitlock addressed in that letter as "brother" was the oldest living son of James (born 1762) and Mary, who remained in Grainger County, Tennessee when his younger brothers Thomas and John migrated to Illinois in 1828 and 1830.

William Golden had located in Vermilion County, Illinois in 1824, having sold 100 acres of land that year, in Jefferson County, Tennessee, for $480.00. The following year he sold 200 acres in the same county for $1000.00, presumably the same 200 acres he had bought from James Haworth in 1810 for $700.00.

Anna Golden, according to Thomas Whitlock (b. Nov. 15, 1825) son of John, became the wife of one John Thompson, their children being Golden Thompson, William Thompson, John Thompson (father of Alex.) and James Thompson, some of whom were well known in Vermilion County, Illinois.

William Golden's wife was Hannah Haworth, daughter of Richard Haworth, whom he married in Tennessee.

From the above it will be seen that there was much mingling of the Golden, Whitlocks, Haworths and Thompsons, all pioneer families of prominence in Vermilion County, Illinois.

Thomas Whitlock (son of John) also is authority for the statement that his grandfather James (b. 1762) had a brother Jacob who went to Ohio as a young man and was never afterwards heard from.

As to the children of James Whitlock and Mary Golden Whitlock, Hannah married a Haworth, their children being Richard, James and Dillon, the last named being the grandfather of Allen W. Haworth who married Aloy Keturah daughter of William and Malinda Golden Whitlock. Hannah later married John Maxwell living in Wayne County, Indiana. She joined with her husband John Maxwell, in 1819, in a deed conveying her undivided interest in the land of her father in Grainger County, Tennessee, to her brother James.

The following is copied from a penciled note on the inside of the front cover of a Harper's Geography which doubtless was used by Aloy Haworth, daughter of William Whitlock:

"James Haworth born 3rd month 25th A. D. 1805. I am now at my dear Uncle John Whitlock's on a visit, in all probability the last time we shall meet in this world he being in his eighty eighth year and I in my 81st year. 3rd month 11th A. D. 1886

I have penned the above without the use of my glasses.
James Haworth"

Sarah Whitlock, sister of Hannah, married Amos Hubbard, and in 1820 joined with him in a deed conveying her interest in her father's estate in Tennessee to her brother Thomas Whitlock. Thomas Whitlock (son of John) stated that the Hubbards lived in Wayne County, Indiana and that he visited them there in 1845. Jacob Whitlock, youngest son of John, is ~~also~~ authority for the statement that the Humberds had two sons, John and Alva, and that John lived near Lafayette, Indiana, and visited the John Whitlock family within his recollection.

in a hasty look into records at Richmond, Indiana, in 1939, this writer found where John Maxwell was appointed guardian in 1855 for certain minor heirs of Amos Hubbard.

Charles Wilford Whitlock, it will be seen, died at the age of thirteen and a half years. His middle name may indicate that he was the namesake of Thomas Wilford, one of the religious martyrs of Virginia under the rule of Governor Berkeley, following the restoration of the monarchy in England.

Thomas and John moved to Vermillion County, Ill., the former in 1828 and the latter in 1830, arriving at Yankee Point neighborhood where William Golden lived, November 15, 1830.

August 17, 1837 James conveyed to one James Wilson for $750.00 128 acres of land on the north side of the Holston River in Grainger County, Tennessee, possibly a portion of his father's estate. One of his ~~great~~ grandsons, Donald E. Whitlock, still resides (1938) on what is said to be a part of the old homestead of his great grandfather James. The old log house occupied by James, Jr., is standing and is occupied by his grandson William Preston Cameron (in 1938). He stated to the writer that James was a successful business man and a "money maker." He and perhaps his father James, Sr. are buried in the old Whitlock Cemetery on the farm nearby, now a wilderness of trees and vines where William Cameron says four hundred people have been buried. Only a limited number of engraved tombstones have been placed, most graves being marked by a large flat stone at the head and a smaller one at the foot, taken from a local creek or quarry. Many descendants of James still live in Grainger County and other parts of the South, several of them being persons of prominence in the professions. A son Preston was a Baptist minister who lived in Illinois at one time and returned to Tennessee.

According to Thomas Whitlock (son of John) his grandmother Mary Adams Golden was descended from the same family that gave John Adams and John Quincy Adams to the nation as presidents. One of her bondsmen as executrix of the will of her first husband Jacob Golden, was Thomas Adams. Uncle Tom is also authority for the statement that the "Whitlocks migrated from Holland to this country during the Revolution," which, if true, probably referred to the disturbances in England in Cromwell's time. Possibly this particular branch migrated first to Holland and later, like many others, came to America for religious freedom.

Bulstrode Whitlock was a prominent member of Parliament during those stormy times and apparently would not break with the established church.

Whitlocks seem to have been widely scattered over Virginia as well as colonies farther north during the eighteenth century, there being many families in Man-over, Goochland, Fairfax and intermediate counties, later spreading west to Pittsylvania etc. We hope to trace the origin of great grandfather James Whitlock who married Mary Adams Golden of Henry County, formerly a part of Pittsylvania, one of these days.

THE QUINE FAMILY

In 1783 William Quine received from the Colony of North Carolina a grant of 631 acres of land in Caswell County for which the consideration was fifty shillings for each one hundred acres. October 11, 1787 he deeded 300 acres to his brother Benjamin. The grant was located on Moon Creek, not far from the present highway leading from Danville, Virginia to Yanceyville, North Carolina.

In his will, probated in Caswell County at the March Term, 1792, William left his land in fee simple to his four sons Jacob, Mordecai, Henry and William after a life estate to the widow Sarah. (See Will of William Quine). Mordecai, then of Smith County, Tennessee, deeded his portion of the land to Jacob on January 30, 1806. January 7, 1807 Jacob deeded to Griffin Gunn 163 1/2 acres, evidently his portion of his father's estate plus the share he had bought from Mordecai.

From the will of William Quine we also learn the names of his two daughters, Elizabeth who had married John Stafford and Sarah, her mother's namesake, who later married William "Cameron" or probably Cameron (Named in the will of Henry Quine in 1816).

According to Thomas Whitlock (son of John) Jacob Quine with his family migrated to Grainger County, Tennessee in 1814. Keturah carried with her to Illinois a small Bible upon two blank pages of which, widely separated, there were written the names and dates of births of the Quine children and of Anderson and Pinckney Gunn, indicating that these two were regarded as part of the Jacob Quine family, the first of these pages being headed, "Jacob Quine Register of Ages."

The following entries appear:

Keturah Quine	born	Aug. 23, 1802
Allen Quine	"	July 28, 1804
Lancelot Quine	"	Apr. 27, 1806
Noah Quine	"	Dec. 15, 1807
Green Quine	"	Jan 25 (no year-probably 1809)
Belinda Quine	"	Dec. 12, 1809
Dolly Quine	"	Oct. 2, 1813
Gunn, Anderson	"	Aug. 20, 1798
Gunn, Pinckney	"	March 31, 1800

On the second page of this record there appears "Dorath Quine born Sept. 2, 1813." This probably referred to "Dolly" whose name was entered on a previous page in a different handwriting as if it had been overlooked because of the wide separation of the two pages of record.

Jacob Quine had married "Eloner" Gunn, widow of Thomas Gunn of Caswell County, North Carolina, whose will was probated in that county at the January term of court in 1801, naming his wife "Eloner," fourteen children and one son-in-law as beneficiaries and disposing of thirty-four negroes. The last two children named were Anderson Gunn, then two and a half years old, to whom he gave two negroes Dick and Lyddy, and "Pinkney" Gunn about nine months old, to whom he gave one negro boy called "Herod." From the fact that Anderson and Pinckney Gunn only are listed with the Quine family, it seems reasonable that Eloner or Eleanor was a second or subsequent wife of Thomas Gunn, a young woman when she married Jacob Quine.

There were no public schools in those early days, so the Quines had little chance for an education. The entries in the Jacob Quine Bible show that. This same Bible was used for many years in the John Whitlock family; and the births of his five children born in Tennessee are entered there in what appears a different handwriting from that in which the births of the Quine children were written, except that of Keturah or "Kitturah" as it appears in the Bible, which is entered in the same hand as the Quines. The first entry in a different hand, that of Allen Quine, has the appearance of being written by someone who had recently learned to write; and it may be that "Kitty" entered the other Quines as well as her own children who were later born in Tennessee. The larger family Bible of John Whitlock, used in Illinois, was printed in 1846, so the entries there must have been made in many cases long after the events occurred. Keturah's name appears as a signer of many deeds of land in Vermilion County, Illinois, with the name generally spelled in that way, but all except one that were examined, showed that she signed with her mark.(X) Quite possibly she was self-conscious about her handwriting and preferred making her mark and having it witnessed rather than go through the ordeal of signing ~~it~~ with a pen, trying to spell out her somewhat difficult name. Two of the deeds were certified by Thomas Whitlock, probably her brother-in-law, and each time the name was spelled "Keturah," both in the signature and in the certificate of acknowledgment. I found her name was spelled or misspelled several ways on the Illinois records.

Also the name of her daughter, "Aunt Nelly," appears in the Quine Bible spelled "Ellender," but in the record of her marriage to David Reid at Danville, Illinois, it appears as "Eleanor; and in the record of her second marriage to Milton Cook it is written "Elenor." The History of Vermilion County, Illinois by Chapman Bros., Chicago, 1889, from an interview with her oldest son Lewis Allen Reid, says the wife of David Reid was "Eleanor, daughter of John Whitlock." From the fact that her grandmother Quine was named "Eloner" (probably misspelled) as shown in the will of Thomas Gunn above referred to, it seems logical that the intention of her mother was to name her for her grandmother and that the name was misspelled in the Bible entry.

This confusion as to names of Keturah and her daughter commonly known in the family as Nelly, is emphasized by the will of Henry Quine probated in Caswell County, North Carolina in January 1816, which bequeaths to "Catherine Quine oldest daughter of Jacob and Nelly Quine his wife, $20.00 in cash." Since Keturah was called Kitty and Kitty is sometimes a nickname for Catherine, apparently her uncle or whoever wrote his will assumed that her name was Catherine; and Keturah's mother "Eloner" or Eleanor was familiarly known as "Nelly" to members of the family.

Origin of the Quine Family and Name.

The compiler of this record had long supposed that Keturah Quine Whitlock was of Scotch origin or descent. Not until 1938 had I ever met anyone by the name of Quine, when I found a man seventy-four years of age in my own town by that name. He told me that his father came from the Isle of Man. Finding the name of a clergyman of the English Church, Reverend Canon John Quine of Lonan Vicarage, Laxey, Isle of Man, a man of eighty years of age, in "Who's Who," I wrote to him and received a very prompt reply. He says: I do not at present know anything more than your letter tells me of the group that took up land in N. Carolina in 1783, your grandmother's branch # # # There have been many migrations--America, Australia and the Cape # # # In 1511, more than 250 years before William and Jacob Quine were settled in N. Carolina my own ancestors, William and Jacob Quine--then called "McQuyne"--held the estate of Balloquine, almost in the center of the Isle of Man, with a considerable number of other families of the name McQuyne and McQuyn in the southern and western part of the island. That they came from Scotland is a mistake. They have been settled in the Island since prior to history. # # # You will note that William and Jacob, the names of my ancestors, father and son 400 years ago, were the same as that of your own about 250 years later. That may possibly indicate relationship, for family branches rather adhered to certain Christian names."

In a more recent letter he says the family were large landholders in four parishes in the Isle of Man and that "four hundred years ago the names was spelled McQuyne and McQuyn, but other branches of the CLAN bore the names Kennah, Kennagh (Quinney) Cunnagh, and there was the form Quayne in the dialectic variation toward the north of the Island."

Canon Quine is a very scholarly gentleman, graduate of King William College, Isle of Man, and of Merton College, Oxford. He writes a beautiful letter in the English University man's style. He suggested that perhaps the name "Kitturah" is a misspelled form for Keturah, the Hebrew name, since the Manx were strong for Bible names; and he is doubtless correct.

Character Sketch and Personal Recollections.

It is a rare privilege at the age of more than three score years and ten, to be permitted to write a character sketch of one's grandfather and grandmother, especially such grandparents as John and Keturah Whitlock. To have been born in their house, the only son of their thirteenth child who was also born in the same dwelling, was a privilege; and to have had the fine moulding influence of their wholesome and noble characters as a young child, was a still greater privilege and determinative in my life.

John was born the fourth and youngest son of a Baptist minister, who died when the boy was not yet six years of age. Industry and thrift were necessary down there on the north bank of the Holston River in Grainger County, Tennessee, one of the new counties organized in 1796 in that portion of land which North Carolina had quitclaimed to the general government when uniting with the other colonies under the new constitution. Five other children were left at the death of the father James, two girls and three boys, the oldest, Hannah, being twenty years of age and James the oldest son being but ten. Mary, the mother and widow, had three children by a former husband to help her plan for the family, Anna, William and Jacob Golden, Anna being twenty-eight, William twenty-seven and Jacob Twenty-four.

They were evidently trained in self-reliance and in all the arts that would help them to keep the "wolf from the door" so long as those arts were not tainted with evil. Schools were rare and teachers crude, but John learned to read and to write a fairly good hand, and must have learned his arithmetic fairly well. When a man with his farm paid for and a house which was outstanding in his farming community, after bringing up a large family with what education the community schools afforded, when he had money to lend to his neighbors, he wrote his own notes providing for legal interest, some of which the writer has seen. They were concise and would have been held good in any court of law.

Before leaving Tennessee in 1830, for Vermillion County, Illinois, John's family had grown until there were Mary, Allen, Thomas, Elender or Nelly, and William to care for. I can imagine the persistence and determination of grandfather as he made long drives with the prairie schooner or "Dutch" wagon day after day in the fall of the year to reach Illinois before winter and before the arrival of a sixth child. It would look as if he had had the training of a modern railroad man in keeping schedules, for the family arrived at Yankee Point on the fifteenth day of November, 1830; and the following day Uncle James was born.

John had heard the command with his mental ear, in view of the responsibilities fast accumulating, "Get thee out of thy country . . . unto the land that I will show thee;" and there might have been added, "And I will make of thee a great family." For more than four hundred and forty direct descendants in the beginning of the sixth generation is a number "not to be sneezed at." On a recent trip by rail and bus, following the same general course across the hills of Kentucky, I could but wonder at the stamina of the man who would start in the fall of the year under such conditions across a wilderness of hills and mountains four hundred miles in extent, with his family in a covered wagon, to arrive in a new and practically unbroken wilderness at the beginning of winter, to found a new home. From a point twenty to thirty miles northeast of Knoxville they had to travel north east up the Holston River valley to Cumberland Gap, thence through the gap on the route first slashed by Daniel Boone well into Kentucky, leaving the original trail and heading along the more recently followed road to the Falls of the Ohio at Louisville, through southwestern Indiana to Vincennes then across the Wabash and north to their destination, the same trail followed in the same year by the Lincoln family of their way from Indiana to central Illinois.

On August 20, 1820 John had led to the altar (or rather, to a Justice of the Peace) the fair and lovely Keturah Quine with her beautiful auburn hair, an inheritance no doubt from her ancestors in the British Isles. She then lacked three days being eighteen years old. They must have appeared a promising couple as they went away man and wife to face the world, with all the exuberance and vivacity of their bubbling youth. If they were not weaklings but perfect physical specimens, no doubt.

"Kitty," or "Kit" as he commonly called her, small in size as she was, never quailed before any task; and it was not till they had spent fifty-six years of what I am sure was a happy married life in which they felt they had many rewards, forty-six years of which was spent in pioneering and developing the community in Vermillion County, Illinois, and she had borne fifteen children, to everyone of whom she was a loving "Mamma" so long as she lived, that she was at last compelled to lay down her burden and go to her reward. John survived her eleven years; and the weight of the loss he had sustained when "Kit" went away was continually present with him till he went to join her.

William Golden, John's older half-brother, had been married 1803, a year and a half before the death of his mother's second husband, James Whitlock. William had migrated to Vermillion County, Illinois, in 1824 with his wife and a family of seven children. In May 1826 he wrote to his mother and his half-brother James Whitlock, John's oldest living brother, "I think I had my health better sense I came here than I have for several years but it may be I feel better because I am so well satisfied with our move." Further on he said, "I have purchased 798 acres of land 680 all joining where I live and 118 acres on big Vermillion with a good mill seat on it which is valuable now I can settle all my children as well as I was settled in Tennessee as to land."

From the size of his growing family, John probably felt that this was the place for him because it offered a chance to provide for those he was helping to bring into the world and to whom he owed as much or more than he received. This was his attitude toward his children all through life. Perhaps most of you of the generations since have seen something of the same attitude in your own parents, a desire to be parents rather than pensioners. A year before he set out for Illinois, John and his brother Thomas who preceded him, had sold 214 acres of land on the north side of the Holston River in Grain-ger County, to one James Wilson, for $1200.00 according to the deed. There was no reference to their father James in the deed, but it is assumed that it was a part of his estate. Eight years later their brother James sold 128 acres "on the north side of Holston River" to James Wilson for $750.00.

Nine months after his arrival at Yankee Point John bought of his half-brother William Golden eighty acres for $100.00 and of William's son Jacob four acres for $20.00, lying just northwest of the present village of Mumrick, Illinois, as per deeds of August 20, 1831. But this land was too flat and wet for one brought up in the hills along the Holston, and there was lack of timber for firewood, rails for fencing and lumber to build a residence such as he had in mind. In June 1833 he filed for record a deed dated February 5, 1833, from Daniel Prigmore, conveying to him for the sum of $600.00 two hundred forty acres of land on the opposite side of the Little Vermillion River, where he later built one of the most pretentious farm homes in that region and where his family grew to maturity. In that house the compiler of this record was born and lived for a time with his parents and grandparents. My father Jacob Madison Whitlock was born there and there he lived as the youngest son of the family until after his marriage. As the youngest son he probably was shown a little deference among the children, possibly protected just a little bit too much, though not particularly rugged, and resembling his little delicate looking mother in many ways.

In this new location grandfather set up a sawmill, which was still operating occasionally up to about the beginning of my recollection, a sturdy type of structure with enormous posts and sills from the magnificent oak timber that dominated much of the land. Here he sawed the lumber for his home, a two story old southern type house with just two large rooms above, one of them large enough for four beds. Downstairs there was a combined kitchen and dining room on the East with a large sitting room in the middle and two small bedrooms on the West. Grandfather personally made the paneled doors, put together with wooden pine, which never sagged or opened in the joints as long as I knew them. There were slatted shutters on the windows, which I have been told he made. And the doors and shutters bore no sign of amateur workmanship. The house was never painted so that after many years nail holes in the weatherboarding became large enough to let the heads of the nails through, and the weatherboards sometimes rattled in the wintry wind while it roared up the great chimney. The farm was largely fenced with black walnut rails.

The house was ceiled throughout with poplar, the outside being covered with poplar weatherboarding. Overhead in the lower rooms were large beaded ceiling beams, while the floors were of white ash, kept scoured to a fitting whiteness. The walls and ceilings downstairs were whitewashed, the forks of wood just above the sitting room door holding the handy old rifle for many years, in easy reach in the early days in case of the sudden appearance of unfriendly Indians, or if a deer or wild turkey came too close for its own good. A large part of Indiana and Illinois was still Indian country in 1830. A pair of antlers all bleached white hung on the garden fence up to about 1895. My father used to tell with some pride, of the time he was attacked by a buck deer that had come up from the woods pasture with the cows in the evening, from which he was saved by grandfather just in the nick of time as the buck was trying to stamp him with its hoofs.

John also set up a blacksmith shop beside the "Old Salt Works" road, a main thoroughfare through the farm, where he shod horses and oxen for others who, as he had done, were seeking a promised land. He was also a shoemaker, and during the dull hours of the night when he otherwise would have been doing nothing but sleep, he worked on his shoe bench, making the shoes for the family and keeping them in repair. I well remember his bench and complete outfit of lasts and tools. He added to his income, too, by occasional shoe repairs for the neighbors. As a blacksmith he was also somewhat of a gunsmith, changing the guns of those days from the old flintlock to the later gunlock that fired a percussion cap. There was a box of old flintlocks on a shelf on the front porch to show for his work.

When the burning fevers of that malarial section became unbearable to his neighbors, John relieved them by bleeding with his trusty lancet, two or three of which I remember seeing among the old flintlocks.

keturah was versed in all the wild plants and herbs that were "good for what ailed you," and winter never came on without an abundant supply of snakeroot, pennyroyal, calamus root to make tea for colicky babies and many others, all properly washed and dried and tied in bundles, hanging on nails in the big porch. When a new member was to be ushered into one of the log cabins scattered about the woods around, she commonly served as the midwife for those unable to have a doctor or when there was not time enough to ride several miles to town to get one. In her later years if you wanted to know the age of any young man or woman in the neighborhood, she could usually give the exact date from memory.

Grandmother was otherwise fully equipped to take care of her part of the team's work. First of all, she was a good cook; and my mother till her death frequently referred to the things grandmother had taught her when she came into the family as a bride, about cooking. She was not only versed in medicinal herbs that grew in the woods, but she knew what sort of bark to use for producing the various colors in dyeing carpet chain and cloth. She could make caniles, dye, wash, card and spin wool and weave such cloths as were needed for the family clothing not only from wool but from flax. Then she knew how to make the plain clothes they wore. In the evening she would sit by the big fireplace, knitting stockings and mittens by the light of the fire in the sitting room. There was another fireplace on the opposite side of the wall, in the kitchen, where the cooking had been done before the coming of the little iron cookstove, with cranes and hangers set in the brick sides and back of the fireplace, on which pots and kettles could be swung over the fire. Then there was the heavy cast iron skillet or oven with a heavy lid, in which the light cornbread, ~~xxxxxx~~ ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ was baked on a bed of coals at one side of the fireplace, cornbread sweet and crusty and fit for a king, not the ordinary corn pone. The baking of wheat bread was done outside the house in a brick oven until the cookstove came in.

The two spinning wheels, a high one for wool and a low one for flax were in common use till about 1870. The flax wheel remained in the old home till late in the eighties, when a forgetful neighbor borrowed it for a long time and could not remember what had become of it when inquiry was made. The cards for carding wool and cotton, the candle moulds and other utensils of pioneer days, disappeared one by one, along with grandfather's long-barreled rifle with its beautiful burl maple stock which had been broken by someone, and which I strongly coveted and tried to locate.

One of the most restful scenes of my recollection is that of a quiet summer afternoon, in the big sitting room, with grandmother and some of the "girls," daughters and granddaughters, sitting or standing at the spinning wheels or sitting about the quilting frames, after the dinner work was done, making something that would aid to the comfort of some of the members of the family. In the summer evening when the supper work was done, grandmother would move the big rocking-chair out on the long front porch, frequently taking me on her lap and singing some of the songs learned in her girlhood home in North Carolina or in Tennessee; for she had had little chance to learn new songs in the "promised land." She was a charter member of the Liberty Church organized near by in 1842 by Reverend James Ashmore, and Aunt Polly Baldwin was an early member. One of her songs early became a favorite of mine. She sang: "Heaven already has begun, persevere on and labor;" and I used to sit in that same wide-seated hand-made rocking-chair with feet sticking straight out and sing: "Heaven already has begun, mercy be on the neighbors." I well remember the time my mother heard me and interrupted to put me straight.

As parents they felt the seriousness of their task and their duty to their children, the home being a model of cleanliness, neatness and orderly behavior. Profanity, slang and vulgarity had no place in that home. Grandfather had a native wit that was always present and must have served well to help him bear the loads he sometimes carried. He saw the humorous side of everything.

The home was a community center for the Liberty Neighborhood, as it became known after the founding of the Liberty Church, a Cumberland Presbyterian church, first of logs and about 1870 a frame building. Three sons became ministers of the Cumberland Presbyterian denomination, and their father's home was always open to any traveling minister, including "Nigger Gabe" as he was commonly known, who used to come along now and then and preach at the local church. I remember examining my hand very carefully to see if any black had rubbed off when he shook hands with me on one of his visits. He was very tall and dignified in his "plug" hat and Prince Albert coat.

An atmosphere of religion always prevailed in the home. Grandmother's songs were religious songs. Grandfather was a man who thought things through, and evidently had not been wholly converted to the old time Baptist faith of his father James. After his children had allied themselves with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, he also became a member. But his life had been one of Christian example and influence. "Uncle Jimmy" Ashmore, who instituted Liberty Church, came from Grainger County, Tennessee, the old Hitlock home.

As to politics, John Whitlock was always interested in the political movements, and was a faithful citizen when it came to voting. During the Civil War he and his family were loyal to the Government like most of the eastern Tennessee people. So much could not be said for another branch of the family, causing a cleavage that has never yet been entirely healed. His last vote was cast for James G. Blaine in 1884, it being necessary then to fix a bed in a wagon to haul him to the polls because he was unable to walk due to injuries. His first vote in 1820 was for Monroe and probably the next was cast for John Quincy Adams four years later, as the family through his mother claimed relationship to the Adams family. He early became a Shig, and after John Q. Adams, Henry Clay became his idol according to his own statement to the writer. In 1856 he voted for John C. Fremont as leader of the new Republican Party, to which he remained loyal to his death.

Born in eastern Tennessee, and being a young man during Andrew Jackson's active years, he loved to tell stories of Jackson's young manhood. When I last visited him, though he was very deaf and badly crippled from falls, he entertained me with stories of Jackson's escapades, particularly one in which Jackson took refuge in a barn loft and hid in the hay to avoid getting caught, over which grandfather laughed heartily.

My mother related that when she first became a member of the family, it was the custom to have a jug of whiskey in the harvest field; but that practice was soon dropped, before I can remember. No liquor drinking was tolerated except for medicinal purposes nor was there ever expressed any sentiment favoring liquor in the home as a beverage or for that purpose elsewhere after I was old enough to observe the gist of conversation. They brought with them to the Illinois home the customs of the country from which they had come.

Grandfather raised tobacco until his late years, prepared his own "twist" of straight tobacco leaf for smoking and rigged up a press in which he pressed his own plug tobacco, into which he mixed enough licorice and molasses to suit his personal taste. His plug was almost black, and the pressure made it as solid as that of the big manufacturers. No cuspidors were ever used about the place, the big fireplace making them unnecessary; but neither were tobacco stains visible on the hearth except after the visit of some expectorative neighbor.

Honesty, industry, frugality and character constituted the family code of action. Winter evenings were employed by the women folks in spinning, knitting and sewing by the light of the big fireplace in my early days. There was a small kerosene lamp at that time which was occasionally lighted for some particular work that had to be done at the table, away from the fireplace; but it was regarded as too dangerous for common use.

Hardy H. Whitlock of Detroit says that he considers grandfather John Whitlock one of the most versatile men he has ever known, and he has known many in important positions.

Mary Eliza Fauley of Urbana, Illinois, reminds me of a story of great grandmother Mary Adams Golden Whitlock which was frequently a cause of merriment in the family, to the effect that when the family migrated from Virginia to Tennessee, she carried a bottle of wine all the way in the pocket of her riding skirt. She probably felt that it would be unsafe from a health standpoint, not to be provided with some form of alcoholic stimulant for "fever 'n ager" were rampant everywhere. Eliza says she remembers being sent by her mother, Aunt Nelly, to stay over night with her grandparents and sitting by the big open fireplace while grandmother knitted and the wintry winds roared and weather-boarding and shutters rattled outside.

John and Keturah made but one visit to their old home in Tennessee, and that was in the fall of 1860, when they took their two youngest living children, Jacob and Louisa, in a covered wagon and retraced the path of their former journey. My father always enjoyed living over again the experiences of that trip, the one longest one of his life. The Civil War was brewing, and the rumblings in the distance that foretold of that conflict, may have been the cause of their making the journey just then. While eastern Tennessee was loyal territory, some of the southern relatives were impressed into the Confederate Army, one of them being a military prisoner at Springfield, Illinois and having been visited there by my father. Being exchanged sometime later, he dropped from a train near Ridge Farm, Illinois, came to grandfather's home and remained there till the war was over.

It was from such a home that there went out ten men and women to homes of their own, founding families that have increased to more than four hundred fifty direct descendants, scattered from India to New York and from Saskatchewan to Venezuela, few of them having failed to live upright lives according to the model set by the grandparents John and Keturah.

Certain genealogical records have the statement: "The Whitlocks were noted for their carelessness, personal bravery and unlimited hospitality." This was well illustrated as to personal bravery and unlimited hospitality, in the lives of our grandparents. Possibly it was the demure little Keturah who erased the characteristic of carelessness from the family, for she was neatness and order itself in everything. Hospitality always reigned in the home. Possibly that in a measure living, especially in a time when the outlook ahead seems so obscure and the way so badly obstructed. Take courage from the conquests of John and Keturah; and if you excel them in devotion to good and noble ideals, you need not fear for the future life.

This story of the simple homelife of the founders of this noble family, has been given you in the hope that it may be in some degree an inspiration to everyone who reads it, leading on to further noble endeavor and higher

Three others were born dead or died shortly after birth and were not named, according to Jacob. Jacob always gave February 15th as his birthday, instead of the 17th as shown above, stating that he "lacked just one day of being a valentine."

The following obituary prepared by Jacob M. Whitlock, was read at the funeral of his mother, Keturah:

"Kitturah Quine Whitlock was born in Caswell County, North Carolina, Aug. 23, 1802, and migrated with her parents to Grainger County, Tennessee in 1814. She was married to John Whitlock Aug. 10, 1820. She was the mother of 15 children, 10 of which grew to maturity. She died Aug. 17, 1876, leaving her husband, 56 grandchildren and 15 great grandchildren."

Note: Error as to marriage date was probably due to relying on memory. RMW.

Baldwin, Darius					Jan. 15, 1820		Jan. 26, 1866
Darius Baldwin was the son of James Baldwin, born July 29, 1788, whose father John Baldwin was a Revolutionary soldier born at Frederick, Maryland, migrated to Ohio and died in 1848. Darius married the first born of John Whitlock children, and died while a young man 46 years old, in the same month with his son William Allen, not quite 21 years old. Mary survived Darius nine years, being still a young woman when she died. My only recollection of "Aunt Polly," as I know her, is that of a tired, care worn though young looking woman. RSW.

Note: The original entry of the birth of Mary Whitlock Baldwin, oldest child of John and Keturah Whitlock, in the old Jacob Quine Bible, printed in 1798, gives the name "Polly" only. Evidently it was considered that her name was "Mary," and the pet name or nickname of "Polly" was used for her as a child. In the new Whitlock Bible, printed in 1846, into which all the records were copied, her name was written "Mary." We all knew her as "Aunt Polly." REV.

Whitlock, Allen--	Son of John and Keturah Whitlock--	Born in Tennessee--	Died in Vermilion Co., Ills	April 29, 1823			Nov. 18, 1875
married
Cooper, Catharine					Mar. 13, 1824	Feb 19, 1845	Aug. 19, 1856

John Whitlock Bible gives marriage date Feb. 19, 1845
 Allen's Bible " " " Feb. 22, 1846 (probably right)

Allen Whitlock operated a farm near Yankee Point Church, Vermilion County, Ills. till his death. He was a good farmer, also a minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, a preacher of wonderful power, known throughout a wide area in Illinois and Indiana, a most saintly and loveable man. I have seen crowds standing about the open windows and doors of Liberty and Yankee Point churches as far out as they could hear. The last time I heard him preach to such an audience, probably the summer before he died, my father stated afterwards that he had preached an hour and ten minutes; and there was no apparent restlessness among the people. An entry in his family Bible says that he "joined the C. P. Church 1851 and was licenced to preach the Gospel in Sept. 1852 and was ordained in Apr. 1855."

B-1

Also it contains the statement that the Bible was presented to him by the "Cumberland Presbyterian church" in 1850. There is no indication as to who made the record. RWW.

Woolard, Marthinda Ellen

An opinion of Ellen Woolard Whitlock which would probably be endorsed by everyone who actually knew her, is that expressed by Nellie Arter Houssey, whose mother, Lenora Whitlock Arter, was a step-daughter of "Aunt Ellen." Nellie says: "The very loveliest woman I ever knew was my Grandmother Whitlock, Grandfather Whitlock's second wife." Nellie's own mother was one of the "loveliest," but she died when Nellie was too small to know how fine she was. RMW.

BORN MARRIED DIED

Whitlock, Elender-- Daughter of John and Keturah Whitlock, Born in Grainger County, Tenn.
Reid, David married (see second marriage later to Milton Cook)

Oct. 23, 1827 Oct. 14, 1904
 July 1, 1827 Feb. 20, 1844 Mar. 3, 1865

Elender--"Aunt Nelly"-- appeared to have learned to perfection about all the arts her mother knew. She was an excellent cook and her house was always neat and as near spotless as could be. Left a widow while just a young woman, with a family of several small children, she heroically took up the task of getting them properly started in life, and did a good job.
 David Reid, who died a young man of thirty-seven, was most highly regarded. My mother often spoke of his fine character and ascribed his early death largely to the humiliation he felt due to hiring a substitute for the Union Army so that he might care for his young wife and children. REW.

William served in the Union Army during the Civil War and was discharged for permanent disability, from which he never recovered. For many years he and "Aunt Lindy" occupied the old homestead while grandfather John made his home with them. In search of health they made two or three trips or more to the Ozark region for a considerable period. "Uncle Bill" had much of the native wit of his father, and his stories of local incidents were usually presented in pantomime with accurate imitation of the voices and manners of the characters involved. Aunt Malinda was a tireless worker at her household duties and for many years wove rag carpet for others as a sideline. There were few things in domestic life of the old days that she did not know how to do, and she was always ready to lend a helping hand to others. As a boy I loved Uncle Bill and Aunt Lindy. REW.

Hardy H. Whitlock was twice elected Sheriff of Vermilion County, Ills., and as a consequence became for a time a national figure with hundreds of newspaper and magazine articles being printed with reference to his repelling a mob at Danville in defense of a prisoner whom they sought to lynch. Such a lynching had occurred there under his predecessor, and when a mob sought to repeat the act after Hardy became sheriff, he gave them ample warning that he must do his duty in defense of the prisoner. Apparently they misjudged his usual good nature for weakness and failed to heed his repeated warning. His wife was equally brave and refused to leave his side, resulting in serious consequences to her later. By the use of a sawed-off shotgun the mob was repelled, doctors spending the night removing shot from their limbs and bodies. Later many were sent to the penitentiary. Governor Yates on August 6, 1903, wrote him a long letter of recognition of his devotion and bravery, from which the following is quoted:

"I deem it my duty to make in addition to the above, the statement that, in behalf of the people of the State of Illinois, I thank you for the courage and thoroughness with which you performed your duty in defending prisoners in your custody, from a mob which had lynched one man and was seeking to lynch your prisoners. When you defended, by force, and by adequate force, as you did, the county jail of your county, and the prisoners confined therein, you gave the full measure of bravery and devotion. I hope and believe, together with all the good citizens, that your bravery and devotion will inspire, for years to come, like bravery and devotion in other officers, under similar circumstances. I feel that your conduct cannot be too highly praised, or too well rewarded. I regret that I have not within my power some other means than this by which I can tender you a suitable expression of, not only my personal appreciation, but the heartfelt satisfaction which your devotion to duty has given to the undivided people of this great state.

Very truly yours,

Rich. Yates, Governor."

He was later chosen County Treasurer of the county.

Campbell, Alexander						Feb. 1, 1852	Dec. 20, 1852

Two spellings of the name, "Belinda" and "Balinda" occur in her father's family Bible, the former at the record of her birth and the latter at the record of her marriage. The name is "Belinda" on the gravestone in the Rose Reid or Whitlock Cemetery on land donated by her father.

The identity of this Alexander Campbell is uncertain. Possibly he was the son of Enos Campbell the school teacher, who married Elizabeth Patterson before or after. HSW.

Hogan Campbell was the son of Alexander Campbell, whose brother Enos was an early day school teacher in the Liberty Neighborhood, to whom my father and many other good citizens developed in that community, owed much for his thorough instruction and high character. Hogan was a lover of children. He had an iron handclasp. I usually spent a week each summer visiting the boys Leonard and Lee, and when I arrived I tried to keep at a distance from my Uncle until it was too late to shake hands. He was carefree and happy regardless of conditions generally, religious, and hospitable enough to fill the house and yard with company on "meetin'" days at Liberty Church. Aunt Lucinda always seemed frail, though always at work. She governed the household, particularly the husky boys, with a rigid control which was always kind but just. I distinctly remember her dealing out justice to Ed with a dry hickory limb on one occasion when he was fifteen or sixteen years old. He took his licking and shed bitter tears though he could easily have held her; but he knew better than to resist, and he also knew he deserved what he was getting. I was very fond of Aunt Lucinda. Lucas Effie J., known among the kin as "Nettie" has been an Industrial Instructor for more than 25 years, teaching the blind, and now acting as Assistant Matron of "Blind Craft," San Francisco--1940. NOTE: I remember being taken by my grandparents on an early morning ride to Uncle Hogan Campbell's on the day Nettie was born. We boys were sent out to play about the sawmill, barn and corn crib until a messenger came and invited us to the house to see the new baby. In my week's visit with the boys each summer after about 1874, I learned a lot of woodcraft, was coached in turning handspins, at which I was a failure; also was rehearsed in the latest "hill billy" songs of the day, so that I always had something new to take home. Leonard, whom my sister Grace nicknamed "Ming" before she could speak plainly, was athletic and daring and knew all the wood lore. REW.			June 7, 1873 June 30, 1854	Apr. 12, 1911	Apr. 28, 1929

Van Allen, Martha Melvina, daughter of John F. and Mary Ann Wells VanAllen-						Aug. 11, 1846	Jan. 17, 1865	Aug. 31, 1922
Born in Licking County, Ohio.

Jacob Madison Whitlock, youngest son of John and Keturah, was very much like his mother, rather too timid, with a natural musical trend. His boyhood ambition was to play the violin, in which he was discouraged because the current opinion was, that the "Devil was in the fiddle," since it was used in the rural districts only at the wild woodland dances where there was commonly plenty of drinking and rowdy conduct. Had he ever heard a fine symphony orchestra, he might not so easily have been turned away from his great longing. All through his life, he referred to his boyhood disappointment. He had an excellent natural tenor voice, learned at local singing schools to read music with remarkable ability, and later, in the winter season, conducted singing schools at local schoolhouses and churches, Liberty, McKendree and Yankee Point. Later he was a harness maker with Uncle Tom at Homer, working for a Mr. Sharp, and in his later life worked as a painter. He was small and appeared frail but had inherited much of the physical stamina and endurance of his ancestors. He usually weighed 100 to 110 pounds.

Martha came from Ohio as a young girl, to live with her older sister Margaret Brown at Eugene, Indiana, where she was kept busy with the housework and tending the babies. Her father and three brothers were soldiers in the Union Army during the Civil War, the father being buried at the U. S. Soldier's Home at Dayton, and a brother John W. having died in service after the war was over in 1865 and being buried at Camp Dennison, Ohio, a fact recently obtained from the War Department. She and the brothers never learned what became of him. Her mother died, leaving her still a young girl. All these experiences lent a sadness to her life, though she was a cheerful mother generally, with a wonderful natural business ability, which was needed in the home. She did the planning and saw that the children had the best education available and were fitted to take care of themselves.

Apr. 2, 1891

Gravestone of Lucius in McHendree Cemetery, near Georgetown, Ills., reads:
"Died Apr. 2, 1891. aged 24 yrs. 3mo. 25 da." No other record was found as to his birth.

NOTE: My Mother often said that Louisa was the loveliest girl she had ever known, and she felt had been sacrificed through ignorance and lack of proper care. REW.

The following essay on "Happiness" was found in the family Bible of John and Keturah Whitlock, evidently written with a very fine steel pen, a recent invention then, by Louisa as a schoolgirl, during the Civil War.

HAPPINESS

If we wish to be happy we must content ourselves with our lot however humble and not be striving after some object which will be worthy of our attention. We are very apt to let anything carry our minds to a great extent and this is calculated to make us unhappy. We once had a happy and delightful country but we are now surrounded with war and distress we feel very unhappy when our friends leave us and start to a distant land to fight for our dear country and when we bid them goodbye we feel very unhappy for it may be the last time we will ever be permitted to see them on this earth.

When we look back upon the past we think of times when we have been very happy and others very unhappy and no doubt the reason of this is that we have permitted our minds to wander away and have not tried to make ourselves contented with our condition in life. An individual can be as happy in the hovel as in the palace and in fact more so because he does not think of attaining higher station while if he was rich and mighty he would continually be striving to exalt himself still higher and therefore he cannot be happy.

We can be truly happy if we strive to do unto others as we would have them do unto us For in religion is the only true source of happiness. and while we are looking back upon the past let us place one solemn thought on the future are we prepared to be happy in the future perhaps the hour may be near at hand when we must bid farewell to the pleasures of this world and are we prepared to meet that hour with happiness.

We have spent many happy hours here but our school is almost to a close and perhaps this may be the last time we will all be permitted to meet here yet if we meet no more we can think of the happy hour(s) past and the friends which we have part them with.
